

(FK 1.8): Once upon a time, on a sunny farm, there was a young donkey named Danny. Danny had soft, gray fur and was very friendly. He was new to the farm and wanted to make friends with the other animals.

One morning, Danny saw some cows in the field. He walked over and said, "Hi! My name is Danny. Can I play with you?"

The cows looked at Danny and mooed. "We are busy eating grass. Maybe we can play later," they said.

Danny felt a little sad, but he didn't give up. He went to the chicken coop. The chickens were clucking and scratching in the dirt. "Hello! I'm Danny. Can I play with you?" he asked.

The chickens flapped their wings and said, "We are looking for bugs right now. Maybe later!"

Danny waited and watched the chickens. He felt lonely but kept smiling. Then he saw a little pig rolling in the mud. Danny ran over and said, "Hi! I'm Danny! Do you want to be friends?"

The pig looked up and smiled. "Hi, Danny! I'm Penny. I love to roll in the mud! Do you want to join me?"

Danny's eyes lit up. "Yes! That sounds fun!" He jumped into the mud and started rolling with Penny. They laughed and played together.

Soon, the cows saw Danny and Penny having fun. They came over and said, "That looks like fun! Can we join?"

"Yes!" said Danny. Now all the animals were rolling in the mud. The chickens watched and clucked happily. "We want to play too!" they said.

Danny smiled as all the animals joined in. They splashed in the mud and laughed together. Danny felt so happy to have made new friends.

From that day on, Danny, Penny, the cows, and the chickens played together every day. They learned that friendship is about having fun, no matter what you do. And they all lived happily on the farm.

(FK 2.3): Once upon a time, on a sunny farm, there lived a young donkey named Danny. Danny was small and had soft, gray fur. He was new to the farm and wanted to make friends with the other animals.

One morning, Danny saw a group of cows grazing in the field. He trotted over and said, "Hi! My name is Danny. Can I play with you?"

The cows looked at Danny and mooed. "We are busy eating grass, but you can join us later!" they said.

Danny felt a little sad but didn't give up. He walked over to the chicken coop. The chickens were clucking and scratching in the dirt. "Hello, everyone! I'm Danny. Can I play with you?" he asked.

The chickens flapped their wings and said, "We are looking for bugs right now. But maybe later we can all play together!"

Danny waited and watched the chickens. He felt lonely but kept smiling. Just then, he noticed a little pig rolling in the mud nearby. Danny ran over and said, "Hi, I'm Danny! Do you want to be friends?"

The pig looked up and smiled. "Hi, Danny! I'm Penny. I love to roll in the mud! Want to join me?"

Danny's eyes lit up. "Yes! That sounds fun!" He jumped into the mud and started rolling with Penny. They laughed and played together.

After a while, the cows saw Danny and Penny having fun. They came over and said, "That looks like fun! Can we join?"

"Of course!" said Danny. Soon, the cows were rolling in the mud too. The chickens watched and clucked happily. "We want to play too!" they said.

Danny smiled as all the animals joined in the fun. They played together, splashing in the mud and laughing. Danny felt so happy to have made new friends.

From that day on, Danny, Penny, the cows, and the chickens played together every day. They learned that friendship is about having fun, no matter what you do. And they all lived happily on the farm.

(FK 3.2): Once upon a time, on a sunny farm, there lived a young donkey named Danny. Danny had soft, gray fur and big, curious eyes. He was new to the farm and was excited to make friends with the other animals.

One bright morning, Danny spotted a group of cows grazing in the green field. He trotted over to them and said, "Hello! My name is Danny. Can I play with you?"

The cows looked up and mooed softly. "We're busy eating grass right now, but maybe we can play later," they replied with a friendly smile.

Danny felt a little disappointed but didn't want to give up. He wandered over to the chicken coop, where the chickens were clucking and scratching in the dirt. "Hi there! I'm Danny. Can I join you for some fun?" he asked eagerly.

The chickens flapped their wings and said, "We're searching for bugs at the moment. Maybe we can all play together later!"

Danny stood by and watched the chickens for a while. He felt lonely but decided to keep smiling. Just then, he noticed a little pig happily rolling in the mud nearby. Danny dashed over and said, "Hi! I'm Danny! Would you like to be friends?"

The pig looked up and grinned. "Hi, Danny! I'm Penny. I love rolling in the mud! Want to join me?"

Danny's eyes brightened. "Yes! That sounds like so much fun!" He jumped into the mud, and they both started rolling and laughing together.

Before long, the cows saw Danny and Penny having a great time. They wandered over and said, "That looks like fun! Can we join in?"

"Of course!" Danny replied excitedly. Now all the animals were rolling around in the mud, having a blast. The chickens watched, clucking with joy. "We want to play too!" they said.

Danny beamed as all the animals joined in the fun. They splashed in the mud, laughed, and enjoyed each other's company. Danny felt so happy to have made new friends.

From that day on, Danny, Penny, the cows, and the chickens played together every day. They learned that friendship could be found in different ways and that having fun together is what really matters. And they all lived happily on the farm, filled with laughter and joy.
